

Multi Block Relief Print

A separate relief block is created for each color. For the example below, a rectangle was carved in relief on the first block. This was then inked and printed on the paper.

On a second block, another rectangle was carved in relief but in a different position on the block. This was then inked in a different color and then printed onto the paper on which the first rectangle was printed.

Registration is always a challenge. There are numerous methods of registering the various blocks to one another when printed on the paper. The end result is a multi-colored image that can be reprinted as long as the multiple relief blocks are preserved.
